CRIMINAL RECORDS/VULNERABLE SECTOR

Criminal record check

A criminal record check will determine if a person has been charged or convicted of a crime. The Youth Criminal Justice Act prohibits a criminal background check for persons under 18 unless applying for employment or volunteering for a Federal, Provincial or Municipal Government Agency. There are two ways to check if you have a criminal history:

Name-based criminal record checks

Using names and dates of birth is the most common way to check a person's criminal history. Name-based criminal record checks are done checking against the Canadian Police Information Centre (CPIC) system. They consist of a check of the National Repository of Criminal Records based on a person's name and date of birth. It may also include searches of other national and local databases. Name-based checks have weaknesses in verifying a person's identity due to some last names being the same, differences in spelling, use of nicknames, legal name changes and the intentional changing of names to avoid a record of criminal history.

Certified criminal record checks

When name-based criminal record checks do not provide a definite way of confirming a person's identity, you may be asked to provide fingerprints. This is known as a "certified criminal record check." A fingerprint search of the National Repository of Criminal Records is conducted by Canadian Criminal Real Time Identification Services (CCRTIS). A very small number of people have fingerprints that cannot be processed electronically. In these exceptional cases, the police service will submit a paper copy of your fingerprints. The use of fingerprints for criminal record checks is based on informed consent and includes sharing the results of that information to a third party named by you on the application form. The fingerprints submitted to CCRTIS for criminal record checks are only used to confirm your identity. At no time are fingerprints added to a database where they could be subject to search.

Police information check

It is also known as a police certificate, background check, record check, or reference check. Contact your local police to learn more.

Vulnerable sector check

A vulnerable sector check is a police information check plus a check to see if a person has a record suspension (pardon) for sexual offences. Vulnerable sector checks started in 2000 to protect children and vulnerable persons and are governed by section 6.3(3) of the Criminal Records Act. It is an offence to conduct a vulnerable sector check if the position does not meet the requirements of the Criminal Records Act. The hiring organization must make the request for a vulnerable sector check. The person being checked provides consent but does not make the request. There is no federal legislation that requires any organization to conduct vulnerable sector checks. Contact your provincial or territorial government for more information. Results of vulnerable sector checks are only made available to organizations located in Canada. Questions concerning vulnerable sector checks should be directed to your local police service.

Working in the vulnerable sector

People who volunteer or have jobs where they are in positions of trust or authority over children or vulnerable persons can be asked to obtain a vulnerable sector check. Being in a position of trust or authority is more than just having contact with children or vulnerable persons. To meet the legal requirements for a vulnerable sector check, the nature of the position – not the person – must cause the person to have authority over, or trust of, children or vulnerable persons. Children are defined as being anyone under the age of 18. Vulnerable persons are people who, because of their age, disability or other circumstance, are more vulnerable than others.

The decision to request a vulnerable sector check is made by the hiring company or volunteer organization. If they determine that a position is one of trust or authority over children or vulnerable persons, they can request that an applicant for the position obtain a vulnerable sector check. The person or organization responsible for children or vulnerable persons also decides how often a vulnerable sector check must be repeated.
